Final Self-Assessment

I was the original conceiver of the idea of the project. In my time at the University of Cincinnati, I have been involved in many student-organization executive boards: two-time President of the Pinoy-American Student Organization (PASO) and recent Founder & President of the Society of Asian Scientists & Engineers (SASE). With these roles, I was able to gain deep programming and event management skills. I contributed my anecdotal research and experience for the event planning lifecycle, which was super vital to our research scope and the features we wanted to implement for the best product.

Along with the development of this project, it allowed me to look at event planning from a different perspective: a more granular and mindful perspective, from both a planner side and a user experience side. This new knowledge changed the way I ran events within both of my clubs and provided more structure and tools to achieve the goals of my event planning needs. The biggest obstacle was not being able to use this approach until around after Thanksgiving break, which was when we started development.

planning needs but our colleagues. This extends to the how I learned the importance of the consumer reviews and input, especially if your project is a product to commercialize. Kevin Nguyen is someone that deserves special recognition on the team. He was the Project Manager and made sure we were kept on track for each sprint, he has great leadership skills.
